

Gilmore Guide to VOLUNTEER OPPORTUNITIES

Over 100 volunteer opportunities near Quinnipiac found below! Before starting your search:

1. Remember the point: Volunteer experiences should be based on YOUR genuine interests and passions (whether they are health related or not!). While many pre-health students enjoy volunteering in healthcare settings and gaining exposure to medicine, don't feel limited to these. There is value and personal growth to be gained in any volunteer activity, regardless of setting. Being involved in your community and exhibiting a commitment to helping others is what is most important. Remember, volunteering involves giving up your free time, so think broadly and find things that you enjoy. It is an easy way to set yourself apart from other applicants during the graduate and professional school application process, so get creative, start early, and volunteer often. When searching, ask yourself the following:

- Is there a specific population or cause that I am interested in helping?
- What areas of need have I observed in my own community or communities near QU?
- What talents, background, or experiences could I contribute in a volunteer setting? (Examples: musicians may play at nursing homes, pediatric units or hospice facilities; athletes may coach or teach sports through the YMCA or other programs; students with great organization/leadership skills may find fundraising or event planning roles; tutors may volunteer at area school after-school programs; etc.)

2. THINK BEYOND HOSPITALS! If interested in volunteering in a healthcare setting, hospitals are a great place to do so; however, don't limit yourself. Think outside of the box! Many clinical settings such as nursing homes, hospice care, physical rehabilitation units, mobile clinics for the underserved, AIDS clinics, mental health or crisis hotlines, public health facilities, etc. have a great need for volunteers. These sorts of experiences can be incredibly impactful and rewarding for pre-med and pre-health students.

3. LONGEVITY IS KEY: Find activities you wish to commit to over time. You may have to try some different things before you find something you are passionate about – this is perfectly fine and expected. However, once you find activities you enjoy, longevity in your commitments is critical to your personal development and important in the eyes of professional school admission. Scrambling to volunteer in the months prior to a medical or professional school application may imply a lack of sincerity amongst the applicant. Volunteer early and often and take on leadership roles whenever possible.

4. BE PROACTIVE AND DON'T DELAY! YOU are responsible for finding opportunities and it is extremely easy to do so – procrastination may negatively impact your timeline and success.

5. FIND OPPORTUNITIES IN YOUR HOME COMMUNITY: You are NOT limited to organizations near campus. You may often find that you have more time to commit to community efforts while home or during breaks. Utilize the following national search engines to search specific locations and key words:
