

All Careers Considered Season 2 Introduction

Hey Hoosiers, welcome to the Spring 2020 semester and Season 2 of All Careers Considered, the Walter Center for Career Achievement's podcast on exploring the amazing things you can do during and after college with your liberal arts degree. I'm your host, Maria Cambone, a career coach for undergraduate and graduate students in Indiana University's College of Arts + Sciences.

Thanks to COVID-19, many students' summer internship plans have been put on hold or cancelled, and seniors are thinking twice about how they are going to market their skills and strengths in a difficult job market. So this May, All Careers Considered is teaming up with College of Arts + Sciences alumni who graduated during the great recession of the late 2000's to get their advice on building experience, how to effectively share your story, and getting a job, internship, or going to grad school during an economic downturn.

The All Careers Considered team is growing, too! In this season, you'll not only hear the lovely, dulcet tones of yours truly. You'll also hear from my co-host, Molly McCurdy, our Assistant Director for Strategic Alumni Engagement [Molly cut in: Hi!]

During this season, Molly and I will take the mic to interview alumni and recruiters to ask their advice on how to find jobs in a recession. We'll talk about finding ways to celebrate your accomplishments in a meaningful way when getting together for a traditional graduation isn't an option. And we'll take a quick peek at the question of whether to go to graduate school now, or whether to wait it out before going back to school.

Stay tuned, Hoosiers. We hope you'll join us for these stories.
