Duties and Accomplishments - You must show how your skills and experiences meet the qualifications and other requirements listed in the JOA to be considered for the job. Also, consider the level of your experience. For instance, did you serve as a team lead or a team member? Also, include examples of relevant experiences and accomplishments that prove you can perform the duties of the position, at the level required for the job.

Use numbers, percentages or dollars to quantify your accomplishments. Include examples of how you saved time, money, managed money, improved a process, etc. Examples: Improved customer service ratings by 15%; presented with the Director's Award for implementing process improvements for incoming contracts.

Tailor your resume to the job of interest. Be sure to address the job-related competencies that are detailed in the announcement and emphasize your strengths. Hiring agencies will look for specific terms in your resume to make sure you have the necessary experience they're seeking. For example, if the qualifications section says you need to conduct "data analysis", your resume should include the term "data analysis" and how you used the skill.

Make your resume easy to read. In other words, use plain language and a basic 12 font print. Consider breaking your experience up into sections related to each major duty. Once you decide on the major duties, list them. You can then describe the specific tasks related to each major duty. Example:

Translating Military Experience

Do not overuse military jargon and acronyms to describe your experience. If your resume is filled with military terms, you may confuse the employer, which could lead to your disqualification. Think of how you would explain your military job during a conversation. What terminology would you use to be understood? Also, consider translating your military job title to one comparable in the civilian workforce. Below are examples of how to translate military experience, titles and general terms to civilian terminology.
