BRIDGE YEAR

IDENTIFYING YOUR GOALS

WHY TAKE A BRIDGE YEAR? Speak to advisors, the MU Career Center, current professionals in your field, faculty, and others. They can help answer important questions, identify programs, pass along what other students have done, and support your applications.

A bridge year should be more than just taking a break, and you should consider what benefits it will afford:

DEVELOP YOUR SKILLS

A bridge year can be an excellent opportunity to gain experience for a job or grad school. What do you want to gain? Experience in a specific role? Developing a certain skillset? Gaining exposure to a new region or field?

SAVE FOR GRAD SCHOOL

Taking time to pay off loans or earn money for grad school is common. Maintain a connection to your career goals by working in your field, volunteering, shadowing, taking classes, and conducting informational interviews.

OTHER MOTIVATIONS

A bridge year may be a break before more schooling, a chance to explore a potential career or a service opportunity, or something else entirely. Dig deep to find connections between your program and your interests.

RESEARCH PAY AND COSTS. Some bridge year programs offer stipends, hourly pay, or scholarships; others are entirely self-funded. Understanding your compensation for the role (including benefits) may help you determine whether it is a good opportunity for you.

ACCESS AND OPPORTUNITY. If you are preparing for graduate school, make sure that you can take graduate entrance exams and easily apply for your programs while in your bridge year. Also, make sure your program is equipped to support your goals! Don't be afraid to ask.

MAXIMIZE YOUR BRIDGE YEAR. Once you've chosen a program, revisit your goals and make a plan for your year. Include experiences you want to pursue and connections you hope to make. Breaking large goals into monthly components may help you keep on track. This may be related to a skill (such as completing a certain project), to post-bridge year plans (such as taking the GRE), or to professional development (such as networking in your field). Reflect on your time by journaling, keeping notes, or consulting with mentors help you see how the experience is helping you prepare for the future.
